CLARA S. HAMON ASKS FAIR PLAY

Soon to Be Tried For Life, She Declares She Was Not Impaired Parolee But Helped Hamon Along Hard Road to Wealth and Power.

On March 10, in a little court house at Ardmore, Okla., Clara Smith Hamon will go on trial on a charge of having murdered Jake Hamon, multi-millionaire oil man and a prominent figure in Oklahoma politics. Mrs. Hamon has written her story as follows:

By Telegram to The Freeman, Ardmore, Okla., Feb. 22.—I beseech those with fairness in their hearts not to look upon me as a woman who parades her past before the curious merely to satisfy an inhuman craving for notoriety. I write this as a warning to butterflies blinded by the flame of adventure. At this moment I can think of no greater happiness than to have my name forgotten, to have it in my power to go somewhere, alone with God and my soul.

I cannot believe it is too late to make atonement. I am not yet thirty and I cannot believe that I shall die. I cannot believe that I shall never face the world again with a chance to prove that I am worthy of respect because I want that chance above everything else in the world. I now plead for fair play. It is not fair that while I am helpless waiting for trial that I should be condemned beyond my deserts. I have been pictured as a woman who became a man's sweetheart for the money and luxuries he could give.

I have been pictured as a woman who heartlessly lured a man from his wife and children. I cannot bear to have these things said. They are not true. Those who know my life, even those who are supposedly my friends, know this to be untrue. I can proudly say that I have never been a parasitical woman. I have worked hard for every bit of happiness I have ever had in my life. I worked side by side with the man I loved while he made his fortune.

I helped him as he climbed, step by step in his career. I do not say this with bitterness. I do not begrudge my labors for him. I loved him then and I wished no greater happiness for him. He had been the only man in my life.

In the ten years I was with him I never had luxuries. I had comforts. Yes, when we travelled, we stopped at good hotels and in New York and Washington we stayed at fashionable places. But those familiar with my life in Ardmore know that I did not have even comforts there.

I was fifteen when I met him. He tried to win me even then—to beguile me with the flattery and gifts of a world-wise man and I, a mere schoolgirl with curls, he bought me candy and perfumes and other things that would please a girl of that age but thank God I was more interested in boys of my own age then and this man of forty seemed quite ancient to me.

At sixteen I had to leave school to go to work. I do not think I was as frivolous as most girls of that age. There was little time for frivolity in my home. My parents had a hard struggle to make both ends meet and in childhood I knew I had to become a wage earner. How proud I felt when I took home my first week's wages. My first job was as a bookkeeper.

At seventeen my life became linked with Jake L. Hamon's. He had persisted in his attentions during the two years following my school days. He pressed his attentions upon me at every occasion. He told me I was beautiful. Nobody had ever told me that before. He did everything that would turn the head of a girl of that age. I was a small town girl. Remember, I had never been outside of Oklahoma. I could conceive of no adventure more wonderful than a trip to Kansas City or Fort Worth. They seemed as far away and as inaccessible as the North Pole to my simple mind.

But, despite my ignorance and inexperience, I was not as easy a victim to this man, old enough to be my father. He had to persist to win me for rooted in me was the ideal held before the average girl—that the goal for every woman is marriage. And, that her love and virtue are to be surrendered only to the man God has destined for her to wed.

Like most girls of seventeen, I was full of romance. I had a Dream Man—young and splendid—who, some day, would come a-wooing and carry me far away to love and be loved always and forever.

Both my father and mother were orphans from childhood. My mother had a lonely existence until my father came into her life. He was her first and only sweetheart. She waited for him five years. My romance was to be as sweet as theirs but, of course, not without its bawls. Without them, it was the most beautiful in the world.

When my sweetheart came he was not young and splendid like my Dream Man. But love, waves a magic wand and the eyes behold the image the heart desires.

A girl of seventeen has not the judgment of a woman. Now was I to know that the coming of this man who pressed his attentions on me who promised me for two years, was nothing more than a calculated carefully planned to work on the susceptibility of an inexperienced, small town girl, with all the conventional traditions?

I learned when he told me I was beautiful. But it did not stop with that. They gave me a diamond ring. They gave me a beautiful dress. They gave me a beautiful car. They gave me a beautiful home. They gave me a beautiful life. They gave me a beautiful future.

DARK HORSE FOR NAVY PORTFOLIO

Man Not Before Mentioned Now Said To Be Harding's Choice—Imagery's Strong Influence Seen in Cabinet Selections Being Made Soon As He Arrives.

By Telegram to The Freeman, St. Augustine, Fla., Feb. 22.—President-elect Harding has practically completed his four months' deliberations on his cabinet and if necessary, he could announce today the names of the ten men who will begin to function as his chief advisers on March 4.

While only two of these men have been definitely and officially announced—Charles Evans Hughes for secretary of state and Harry M. Daugherty for attorney general—it was indicated today by those close to the president-elect that the naval and commerce portfolios concerning which a great deal of uncertainty has existed, have both been decided upon.

Herbert Hoover, it is believed, will be the next secretary of commerce; for the naval berth, a man has been selected who has hitherto not figured in cabinet speculation. There is reason to believe that the new secretary of the navy will be a "dark horse," a man familiar with international affairs and a man familiar with the intimate working knowledge of the navy. It was said today that his appointment will come as a surprise to the public.

There is today uncertainty regarding the only place in the Harding cabinet, according to close advisers of the president-elect. That is the labor department.

For this post, it is believed that the choice has narrowed down to two men—James J. Davis, former labor leader and head of the Loyal Order of Moose, and James Duncan, an official of the American Federation of Labor and present head of the Granite Cutters' International Union. Chances are said to favor Davis ultimately getting the plum, although the latter's friends are unceasing in their efforts to secure his appointment.

One of the developments of the clearing up of the cabinet situation has been to make it virtually certain that there will be no distinct "southern representative in the cabinet." Alvin Tobias Hirt, national committeeman from Kentucky, who was selected in some quarters to get the naval appointment after the Lowden withdrawal, has been finally eliminated. It is believed certain, also, that other southern men, particularly former Senator Newell Sanders of North Carolina, have been definitely shelved. They may be taken care of in passing out the smaller patronage plums, of which there will be a great number early in the new administration because of the necessity for creating an entirely new shipping board and filling four places at least on the interstate commerce commission.

Harry M. Daugherty, the new attorney-general, whom Senator Harding warmly praised yesterday, figured largely in the final cabinet conference. He has been in more or less constant conference with the president-elect since his arrival here. When he arrived in St. Augustine none of the cabinet had been publicly announced and at least three places were actually unfilled. When he left today to return north two members of the cabinet had been given to the public and the other places, excepting possibly labor, had been filled.

Although Herbert Hoover has figured in cabinet speculation, it was asserted today that he had not been finally decided upon last night. His cabinet worries behind him, Senator Harding today observed the 183rd anniversary of George Washington's birth by participating in the ceremonies attending the unveiling of a historical tablet at Fort Marion here. The fort is one of the chief historical landmarks of this section, dating back to Spanish occupation.

The tablet is being presented to the State of Florida by the Colonial Dames of America.

Also, today was the 163rd anniversary of the founding of the fort and the 100th anniversary of the purchase of Florida by the United States from Spain.

Animal Prophets.

Few beliefs are older or more widespread than that animals, and especially wild animals, have foreknowledge of what the weather is to be, and something that amounts to such foreknowledge many of them doubtless do possess, but there is no reason, and only poor evidence, for assuming that there is a source of information accurate enough and of application remote enough to give any appreciable extension to the weather bureau's prognostications.

PREDICT SEVRES TREATY REVISION

Interests Of France and England Again Diverge in Near East—Lloyd-George Believed To Lean To Turks Who Are Stating Case To Conference.

By Telegram to The Freeman, London, Feb. 22.—The second stage of the struggle to decide whether Greece or Turkey is to be the dominant power in the Near East was set for this afternoon when the Turkish delegates were to be formally summoned to state their case.

The Turks were to give answer to the claims previously presented by Premier Kallagoropoulos, of Greece, who told the Allies that the Greeks could clear the Turkish Nationalists out of Anatolia without outside military help. The Greek premier's one condition was that Greeks be given financial aid. The Allies took the Greek memorandum under advisement for a decision later.

Efforts have been under way to bring about a reconciliation between the rival Turkish delegations: One, representing the Constantinople government headed by Tawfik Pasha; the other, representing the Nationalist government at Ankara, headed by Bekir Sami Bey.

Tawfik Pasha has been ill, suffering from a chill ever since his arrival. He was to present the chief argument for the Constantinople government, supported by a secondary speaker.

Bekir Sami Bey and a colleague were to tender the claims of the Nationalists. The Nationalists ask for revision of the Treaty of Sevres, giving back to Turkey considerable of the territory taken from her by that instrument. The Nationalists also seek the evacuation of Turkish soil by Allied troops and recognition of the Ankara government.

Although there was apparently nothing official to base it upon, a number of newspapers predicted that the Treaty of Sevres would be modified.

The Pall Mall Gazette printed an article written by "a delegate," pointing out that as there are 1,000,000 Moslems who are British subjects, there is apparently ground for belief that Premier Lloyd-George is pledged not to participate in the complete dismemberment of Turkey.

Before the present conference opened, all outward indications pointed to a conflict of views between Premier Lloyd-George and Premier Briand upon the question of modifying the Turkish treaty. The British premier was understood to oppose revision, while the French premier is understood to favor it.

Informal conversations were conducted at 10 Downing street during the morning by the British, French, Italian and Japanese delegations.

Like most girls of seventeen, I was full of romance. I had a Dream Man—young and splendid—who, some day, would come a-wooing and carry me far away to love and be loved always and forever.

An earlier picture he painted for me, the unsuspicious small town girl of seventeen. He would send me to business college, then take me into his office as a stenographer and by helping and inspiring him I would have a real part in his career as he rose to power.

At first he seemed so horribly old. I had yielded to him, he seemed old no longer, but every bit as young and splendid as the hero of my dreams. For love had waved a magic wand before the eyes of seventeen. I had given him the first love of seventeen. I had not then the judgment of a woman. I had not a woman's experience to show me the folly of my acts. I simply had yielded for "seventeen" could no longer resist.

He took me to a school at Oklahoma City and later to a school at Fort Worth. When I finished business college I entered his office as a stenographer.

He was not a rich man when I went to him. He wanted wealth and he saw his opportunity in oil. I went with him into the oil fields. I stayed with him night and day and he waited for his first oil well to bring him fortune or failure. Many nights we went without sleep, many times without food. We slept sometimes in our automobile far out in the fields. There are no comforts or conveniences in an oil field. Any woman who has stayed in the fields day in and day out knows the hardships I endured.

But I was with the man who taught me to love him. He wanted me there and nothing else mattered. Those days in the oil fields were the sweetest and happiest in my life. It was so glorious to feel that he needed me and that I was helping him achieve his dreams.

Court Holds Public Service Commission Hearing Should Be Final.

A recent decision handed down by the Court of Appeals is of interest as indicating the position of the Court of Appeals on any appeals for review of Public Service Commission rulings.

In a case of the People Ex. Rel., New York Central Railroad Company et al. vs. Public Service Commission et al. 152 App. Div. 228, 138 N. Y. Supp. 924 the Court of Appeals stated:

"First—The determination of the Public Service Commission of the regulated rates of toll and supported by evidence to be in accordance with the judgment of the court, even though the court should be of the opinion that a better disposition might have been made of the questions involved."

This is an important decision as affecting the jurisdiction of the commission and the power of its decisions to cause affecting public utility matters properly come before it for review and decision.

You wouldn't consider your home thoroughly equipped without modern sanitary plumbing with no better heating system than was used twenty years ago, with a well in the front yard instead of a connection with the city water supply.

Why not the same care and consideration in the important matter of lighting? Is not the conservation of the eye-sight and health, the convenience and safety of the household, worthy of your best thought and effort.

Then why cling to some old and inferior method of illumination when electric light, pure, clean, cool, convenient, hygienic and safe, is so readily available at a price you can well afford to pay?
